

TIMBER GUIDE

SURIAN RED CEDAR

Surian Cedar is the Asian botanical cousin of Australian Red Cedar (Toona Australis). It shares the same properties and appearance as the Australian timber which was the traditional wood used for joinery in northern Australia since early colonial times. It is ranked to have the highest possible durability for external use. Cedar is known as the king of timbers due to its strong colour and grain with only moderate colour variations that naturally blend overtime. Cedar is the mainstay of Woodworkers range of doors because it is attractive, durable and termite repellent. All cedar used by Woodworkers is certified legal with government verification at source.

NG ROSEWOOD

Woodworkers manufacture in New Guinea rosewood but do not use it for our stock joinery because it is relatively expensive and scarce. It is a highly durable and stable timber with similar characteristics to Teak. However it also has significant colour variations which require it to be lightly stained to get a consistent appearance.

AMERICAN OAK

There are 8 commercial oak species marketed under the banner of "American Oak" which have varied characteristics. All Woodworkers Oak timber is supplied from sustainable plantations which have legal certification. Oak is desirable because of its blonde colour and distinctive grain. It is a hard timber but not particularly durable, and therefore needs to be used in protected situations. The timber is popular architecturally as it provides a Scandinavian or Hampton vibe that blends with light and bright Oak interiors.

EUCALYPTUS

Woodworkers source plantation grown Australian Rose Gum (Eucalyptus Grandis) which comes with PEFC certification. It is a hard stable timber with distinctive light coloration. We use it for some external joinery where its ability to withstand knocks and weathering make it a practical choice.

PACIFIC MAPLE

Pacific Maple is a marketing name for approximately 14 species of Asian Timbers usually in the Meranti family. These timbers are not durable and are generally only useful for paint grade protected situations. Woodworkers import a range of internal doors in Pacific Maple but do not domestically manufacture in these timbers.
