

fresh ideas from woodworkers

The Toku is new to the range of the Woodworkers Company, Australia's leading door design company.

A fresh addition to the company's contemporary door range, the Toku uses simple geometry to stunning effect. The cast stainless steel eyelets were specifically designed by Woodworkers and have the option of clear or opaque glass. The geometric pattern can be reconfigured to any design using Woodworkers state of the art CNC machining capability and the design can be extended to larger pivot style doors.

The design will initially be stocked only in the standard 2040mm x 820mm x 40mm format using solid core Surian red cedar facings, with all other sizes and finishes custom built.

"We're quite excited with the Toku" says Woodworkers director and architect John Coates "we feel the door market is ready for some new thinking and the Toku allowed us to bring together our hardware design people and our timber joinery specialists to create something unique. We're the only company that designs all our own handles, locks and hinges as well as the largest range of doors in Australia, so the Toku was a natural progression".
